

Artwork of the Week

In Green

Alice Boyle

Alice Boyle was born in Scotland. She chose to study Interior Architecture at University as she loved designing and making model houses. There were many elements of Interior Architecture she enjoyed but she rarely got to physically make and create. The environments she created were always based around contrasting materials and textures.

She went on to do a Masters in Interior Architecture at Edinburgh College of Art. Whilst she was there, she became more and more envious of the other students who were covered in paint, working in the workshops and more free to express themselves. She was getting frustrated with hypothetical projects and longed to make pieces that were tangible.

After she her final masters project to the examiners, they asked her where and what she was going to do next. She said, “I’m going to stay in Scotland and become an artist”, and she did.

Alice Boyle

Reflection

How does the artist use colour in the artwork?

Why do you think this artist created this work?

If you met the artist, what would you ask her?

